

The Religion of Evolution, Part 1

We are living in the age of the religion of Evolution. I know that some call this science and there are those who believe that all science is fact and proven to be true. However, if you ever looked into the books on Evolution at least some of them are honest enough to declare that Evolution is a theory, not a fact.

Now a theory may have some scientific findings that seem to support it but until all the facts are in and can be verified, a theory remains a theory. At the very heart of evolution is a preconceived assumption that cannot be proven. Evolution begins with the unproven assumption that there is no God and that all order and complexity are the products of the mindless processes of nature. Since this assumption cannot be proven, Evolution remains a theory. Creationists have honestly and openly acknowledged that their position is based on the unproven assumption that there is an Almighty God who created the earth in 6 literal days as recorded in Genesis 1-2. Why then does the Evolutionist work so hard to cover his unproven assumption by calling his science fact?

In the last couple of decades, there are many in the field of science with earned degrees in their various fields of study that have declared that much of what evolution declares as fact is not scientifically possible. Not all of these scientists are Christians. Many are honest men of integrity, who after study and research, declare only what can be seen as evidence; that the order and complexity of the physical universe has to be the work of some intelligent designer.

The reason so many evolutionists declare their theory as fact is because it has become a religion, which if believed as it is taught in its many presentations, becomes not science but religious faith. Faith in what cannot be proven and cannot be backed with scientific evidence is by nature of definition is religion.

Today I want you to consider with me 12 bridges that no Evolutionist has ever crossed and cannot cross with scientific evidence. The first bridge that cannot be crossed is the BRIDGE OF MATHEMATICS. Sir James Jean in writing about this “Mysterious Universe” declared God to be “The Divine Mathematician.” Kepler, the astronomer declared his field of astronomy was “Crystallized Mathematics” and later personally declared, “I think Thy thoughts after Thee O God.” No honest thinking person can study the universe without coming to know and realize that there indeed was a master mind that planned, designed and brought into being creation. Creation did not just happen by chance. It would make as much sense today to say that an expensive watch was not designed or made by man but that it just came together by metal coming out of the ground and becoming watch parts etc. Interestingly there are many committed evolutionists who also declare this as fact and try to fit the God of Creation with the process of evolution.

If you study history you will see that the ancients were actually more profound in their grasp of the meaning of mathematics than many of our moderns today. They measured the earth’s size within a few miles of what we know today to be fact. They calculated calendars, knew many principles of physics, hoisted huge stones building temples and pyramids without the use of modern tools and advanced science. In fact much of what they did still remains a mystery yet to be discovered by all the wisdom of modern man. They still do not know the secret of the tiles used in Abraham's day which are far superior to any we have today. We have lost the secret of the glass yard balls used in lawn decorations when we destroyed that secret in Japan with the A-bomb. Recent discoveries from ancient Rome shows that the medical knowledge and procedures they followed were not "rediscovered" until after the 1940s. One can only imagine how further advanced our understanding of the human body would be if that information had not been lost for a millennia. What animal, bird, fish, etc. has any aptitude for this sort of thing? Therefore how can we say that man evolved from animals?

Evolution, like it or not, is the grounds for the teaching of racial inequality. Does it not teach that in every animal species some are not as strong as others and thus they ultimately die out? We call it survival of the fittest. If man is an animal than it only makes sense that some races are more evolved or superior than others. The effects of this evolutionary premise can be seen in History during the Nazi era. As the "superior race", they saw no problems committing atrocities against the Jewish people and the mentally handicapped among others. These "inferior races" were tortured through medical experiments and exterminated because of the evolutionary belief that some races are less fit to exist than others. When we eliminate God as the author of all of creation, evil thrives and all value of the importance of human life is eliminated.
